With the KT100 there's a thing called "blueprinting". There's a big difference between a "stock" KT100 and one that has been blueprinting. A big difference. Unless you know if it's been blueprinting, it would be very difficult to tell if it was just by looking at. Find a kart shop close to you and get it checked out. I owned one of the first 100 KT100's imported into the United States. 1976! I ...

The KT120 and KT150 are both pentode devices and the KT88 and KT100 are described as beam tetrodes so no, I wouldn't think these can be easily interchanged even though the data sheets have the same "pin-out". Without delving into all the detail (which you of course can do) there may be several technical differences that may or may not make interchangeability easy or difficult. On the Non ...
